

TEST OIL WELLS TO BE STARTED SOON

Territory in Western Part of Jackson County May be Opened Before Close of September.

PROMOTERS ARE CONFIDENT

Believe That Gas and Oil Will Be Found in Large Quantities at Depth of 1,000 Feet.

The work of drilling test wells for oil and gas in the vicinity of Crothersville and Austin will begin in the near future according to George J. Riehm of Terre Haute, who was in the city today on his way to the leased territory. Mr. Riehm in partnership with Charles Boone, of Austin, are promoting the business and have secured the lease upon 1,500 acres of land between Crothersville and Scottsburg.

It was expected that several wells would be drilled about three months ago and preliminary plans were practically completed but the work failed to start at the scheduled time because of the difficulty with the contractor. However, everything is getting in good shape now and the promoters hope to have three or four wells in before January 1.

The question of drilling the wells has been taken up with another contractor and while the final arrangements have not been completed, the indications are that the contract will be closed in a very short time. In fact Mr. Riehm is on his way to Austin in order to close up some final details before the contract is awarded.

In speaking of the delay Mr. Riehm said: "The people of this community are probably of the opinion that the matter has been dropped but as in all undertakings of this kind there are many unforeseen difficulties, and while apparently no progress has been made, we are still working as hard as ever and expect to have some wells started within the next few weeks."

The men who are interested in the movement have made some careful investigations of the condition and are of the opinion that the territory lies in an oil field. It is thought that oil will be struck at a depth of about one thousand feet and the promoters are enthusiastic over the progress of finding oil and even at a less depth than this. They are confident that gas will also be found in the vicinity of Austin, as they have already found several indications which are most favorable.

Mr. Riehm said that he drove over much of the territory a short time ago when the land was covered with water and that in a number of places the water was forced several inches into the air. He believes that this was caused by a gas pressure under the surface and said that while the surface gas would not be valuable it would lead to deeper wells where a good supply will be found. He also stated that he had been informed that there was a "gas blow off" in the south part of Jackson county several years ago and that this would indicate there was considerable pressure beneath the ground.

The state geologist is expecting to visit the territory sometime this summer and to make some investigation of the conditions there. As soon as

Mr. Riehm returns to Terre Haute he will again take up the question of drilling with the contractors and it would not be surprising if the drilling outfits were sent to Crothersville before the latter part of next month.

STRANGER ATTEMPTS TO STEAL RING AND BRACELET

Young Man Caught With the Goods at Laupus' Jewelry Store This Morning.

A young man giving a fictitious name visited Laupus' Jewelry store this morning and asked to be shown a line of bracelets. Mr. Laupus placed a number of boxes before the customer when the latter stated that he had seen one Thursday in the window which he admired very much. Mr. Laupus brought the bracelet from the window and returning to the customer noticed that there was an empty box and immediately became suspicious that the man had taken the bracelet.

He said nothing about the matter, but when the customer stated that he desired to purchase a ring Mr. Laupus was very careful to select a tray which was entirely filled. He then gave the man every opportunity to take as many rings as he desired from the tray and when he returned to the customer noticed that one of the finest of the lot was missing.

Without making his purpose known, Mr. Laupus walked around quietly to the front door and locked it and then told the young man that he had stolen the ring and told him to produce it. Without delay the ring was returned with the answer that he intended to buy it. Mr. Laupus then told him that he had stolen a bracelet and demanded that it be returned which was done immediately. The young man told Mr. Laupus that he had intended buying the two pieces of jewelry, but as he did not have the money to pay cash for them desired to purchase them on the installment plan. He was told that the store did not conduct an installment business and was hurriedly shown to the front door.

A number of the merchants have stated recently that small articles have been taken from their stores by supposed customers, and a number of them intend keeping a close watch for such people hereafter.

WIDOW OF DEAD MAN TAKES STAND IN THE PRICE TRIAL.

In Cross Examination Attorneys Refer Frequently to the Records of Last Trial.

The trial of Zachariah T. Price, of Jennings county, who is charged with murder in the first degree for killing his farm tenant, Fletcher Cook, is progressing rapidly. Two physicians testified yesterday, one of them stating that the bullet struck Cook on the spinal cord, causing partial paralysis.

Mrs. Cook, widow of Fletcher Cook, the man who was killed, testified yesterday afternoon. Her testimony showed little change from that given upon the former trial. The attorneys will make a rigid cross examination of all witnesses and the copy of the evidence given in the first trial is referred to frequently. It is said that a number of the witnesses have become somewhat confused upon the cross examination when reference was made to their testimony in the trial which was held several months ago.

BEDFORD LAWYER IN JUDICIAL RACE

R. L. Browning Nominated as Candidate for Judge on the Progressive Ticket.

WANT ANOTHER CANDIDATE

Candidate For Prosecutor Not Named Place Offered F. W. Wesner Who Refused to Run.

At the close of a county Progressive convention held at Brownstown Thursday afternoon, the delegates selected for the judicial convention from Jackson and Lawrence counties met and nominated R. L. Browning, an attorney from Bedford, as candidate for judge. Some difficulty was experienced in getting an attorney from Jackson county to run as a candidate for prosecutor, and as a result the selection for this office was not made at the convention but will be named later by the county chairman of Jackson and Lawrence counties later if they can find some one to make the race.

The Progressive leaders believe that it would make the ticket stronger to nominate a Republican attorney from Lawrence county for judge and then name an attorney from the Democratic ranks from Jackson county for prosecutor. Although the matter was brought to the attention of several local attorneys none of them would accept the proposed honor.

Wednesday afternoon F. W. Wesner, who made the race for nomination for prosecutor upon the Democratic ticket several years ago, was called by long distance telephone by a Bedford attorney and asked if he would accept the nomination on the Bull Moose ticket. Mr. Wesner was inclined to first believe that the man was joking with him but later when he found out the question was asked in all sincerity, he refused the nomination and said that he did not care to take any part in the third party movement. Mr. Wesner, although a Democrat, is opposed to the third party movement and said that morning that he would take no part in their campaign.

Milton Barkman, of Jackson county was nominated as candidates for County Surveyor on the progressive ticket.

NECESSITY OF ROAD LAW SEEN ON THE NEW STREETS

Violation of "Keep to the Right" Rule May Result in Accident With Increased Traffic.

Since the opening of the new improvements on North Chestnut and South Walnut streets, the streets have proven very popular with the automobiles and other pleasure vehicles and with the increased traffic the real need of obeying the state road law of keeping to the right is more fully appreciated. There is seldom a day when two vehicles do not narrowly miss an accident because one of the vehicles is upon the wrong side of the street. The state law states specifically that automobiles and other vehicles shall keep to the right, and the police department of this city recently gave out instructions that the law should be obeyed.

The need of the law is especially seen in the business district where the street is divided by the interurban line. It is with difficulty that two buggies can pass each other while going in opposite directions along the side of an interurban car, and frequently automobiles and buggies are brought to a sudden stop in order to avert a collision.

All of the mail and money was found in his grip when he was shot.

The robber boarded the train at Kansas City.

B. & O. S-W. TO SOLVE DUST PROBLEM WITH CRUDE OIL

Will Be Used Upon C. H. & D. Divisions This Summer and Local Road Later.

The trouble with flying dust experienced by passengers on the B. & O. S-W. is to be met in the near future, it is stated, by oiling the right of way. Crude oil will be used the same as is placed upon the streets for this purpose and it is believed that travel during the hot summer months will be made much more pleasant.

The right of way of one of the divisions of the C. H. & D., which is owned by the B. & O. S-W., will be oiled in a few days and other divisions of the same line will be treated in a similar manner before the close of the summer. If the experiment proves a success, as it is believed it will, the work of oiling the road bed of the B. & O. S-W., from Cincinnati to St. Louis will then begin.

Health & Beauty Hints

By Katherine Morton

It is perfectly natural for a fastidious woman to worry about the looks of her hands when she is so placed that she must do hard and dirty work. The hand that shows the signs of domestic drudgery does not add to a woman's charm, while the one that looks as if it was laid in pink cotton all its life does. Yet the working hand can show a deal more character than the soft, pink-tipped, unused one, and the energetic housewife, with a minimum of daily care, can keep her hands in better shape.

Much of the beauty of the hands will depend upon the quality of the soap used for the toilet, and as to that the housekeeper's hands would respond far more quickly to her little moments of daily care if she used a fairly good soap for her housecleaning. The cheap soaps supplied for house-keeping are strong with alkali, and their constant use will ruin the best skin. To preserve and promote the whiteness and delicacy of the hand skin, a mild emollient soap containing much oil is needed, at least for the toilet. A cake of old castle soap, shaved to a powder and then boiled to a jelly, makes a very gentle and thorough cleanser for the hands. A finer soap is made of the best white curd soap and old castle, in the proportion of one-seventh of the latter to six-sevenths of the former. This can be perfumed and made further helpful with the addition of one ounce of essential oil of almonds to four and a half pounds of the soap.

The dish pan must answer for many sins, for through constant immersion in hot, greasy water hands once pretty are ruined every day. When the housekeeper goes from hot water to cold, too, she does her hands a still greater injury, for the sudden change of temperature is very baleful in its effect. Rheumatism is caused in this way as well as salt rheum and a score of other hand annoyances. The skin hardens and discolors and the hands soon look weather-beaten and old. As to dish washing with the bare hands, it is sheer nonsense, and the housekeeper who "washes up" in this manner deserves pretty much all she gets. The drug store and the other shops have rubber gloves for this very purpose, dish mops are cheap and by making a little pad for the necessary holding of the dish while it is being mopped the hands can come through a dish washing spree without the least injury. Have two pans of water, one for washing and one for rinsing, and then let the dishes drip dry in one of the metal racks sold so cheaply. They will be cleaner than if wiped and the hands will get a little extra rest. Save them all you can—it is your duty.

For this dishwashing with gloves, for dusting and all other "redding up," the hands are helped if they are greased before the gloves are donned. When putting up fruits they are saved a lot of staining if they are first anointed in this way, for the emollient used sinks into the skin and so keeps the stain from becoming deep seated.

When a party is imminent and the housekeeper feels that she must give her hands an extra beautifying so that she will look well in her short-sleeved frock, after giving her hands and arms a thorough scrubbing let her rinse them off in a bowl of fresh water containing a teaspoonful of benzoin, which bleaches the skin to some extent almost instantaneously. If the hands are browner than the arms, pay more attention to them, rubbing the benzoin water well into the skin, but seeing, too, that it is not strong enough to bite. Then go over the hands with the skin of a freshly-cut cucumber, rinse off the juice, dry the hands partly and then rub in a delicate hand lotion such as is made by six parts of rosewater to one of glycerin. The lotion will plump the skin and add to its whiteness. It will also help to keep on the powder, if that is to be used on the hands and arms.

Compact Folding Table.

For the small apartment where every inch of space must be economized, there is no piece of furniture to equal the folding table, which when closed may be placed almost flatly against a wall.

When opened this table shows a flat surface, covered with balze or morocco, on which a tea tray may be set or a four-handed game of cards played. Through its center this top is invisibly hinged and has two flat lids, one of which, when raised, discloses a shallow box containing an entire sewing equipment.

The other side is fitted with a complete writing desk set in addition to a blotter pad, next to which are sunken grooves for pens and pencils and at the two upper corners wells for ink and paste.

To Cut Thin Materials.

Great difficulty is often experienced when cutting thin materials, such as chiffon, net and mulline.

If the material is planned to paper it will remain firm, and the trouble will be overcome.

COULDN'T READ THEN.

An optician said, when humor was mentioned: "My business sees fun occasionally. I had a case myself a day or two ago. An old dandy came into the store and said he wanted a pair of spectacles. The clerk tried one lens on his eyes, and pointed to the paragraphs on a piece of cardboard. 'Can you read that?' he asked. 'No, suh,' replied the dandy. The customer tried another pair, and another pair, and many others, declaring he could not read with any of them. Finally the clerk, out of patience, asked: 'Well, say, can you read at any time?' The negro smiled broadly and answered: 'No, suh, that's why I want glasses. My wife she read yo' advertisement sayin' as how anybody could read with yo' glasses, so I thought I might as well come an' try 'em all.'—New York Tribune.

Better Business.

The $10,000 pitcher disputed a decision, kicked vigorously, and got put out of the game. The manager took him aside.

"You're new to the team and I'll excuse you this time."

"What's that?"

"Listen to me. Don't never get put out of the game again for kicking. You're too expensive. Let one of them cheap outfielders do the kicking. Get me?"

The pitcher said he did.

"Why, she's interested in a serial story in a magazine I let her take and now she's waiting for me to bring home the next number."

Sunday School Lesson

Lesson VIII. August 25

VISIT TO NAZARETH. Luke 4: 16-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He came unto his own, and his own received him not.—John 1: 11.

According to the harmonies of the gospels, this lesson takes us back in the story a long distance, back to a time before the Sermon on the Mount, to a time soon after the first miracle at Cana and the meeting with the woman of Samaria, according to Matt. xiii, 54-58; Mark vi, 1-6. He did revisit Nazareth after the events in last week's lesson and taught in the synagogue, but could do mighty work, except healing a few sick folk, because of their unbelief. They were astonished at His wisdom, but they were offended at Him and said: "Where hath this man all these things? Is not this the Carpenter, the Son of Mary, the brother of James and Joseph and of Juda and Simon, and are not his sisters here with us?" He only replied: "A prophet is not without honor but in his own country and among his own kin and in his own house." Because He said something similar in our lesson for today some one must have thought the incidents the same, and the more perhaps because Luke only records this, and only Matthew and Mark the other. The incident of this lesson occurred very early in His ministry, while that was much later and was probably His last visit to Nazareth. Turning to this lesson, we note that it was His custom to go to synagogue on the Sabbath day, and it could not have been for the benefit received from any discourse there, but there was always a portion read from the law, the prophets and the psalms, and that could not but be profitable to a truly devout mind. Forsaking the assembling together is one of the common and increasing sins of our day, disobeying Heb. x, 25. There is a great forsaking of the house of God and despising of His word, but all things hasten to the consummation, and the kingdom shall be the Lord's.

On this particular Sabbath He was asked to read, and there was given Him the roll or book of the prophet Isaiah. Finding the place known to us as chapter lxi, He read just a few sentences and closed the book or roll and gave it again to the minister and sat down. With what expression He must have read! It was surely according to Neh. viii, 8. He read distinctly and gave the sense, and now, having taken His seat, He was about to cause them to hear. He was about to cause them to understand the reading. We do not wonder that the eyes of all in the synagogue were fastened on Him (verse 20), for if this was His first reading it was the first time they had ever heard the Son of God read from His own book. How wonderful and startling were the words He uttered. "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears!" (21) For a literal fulfillment of each sentence that He read see Luke vii, 22; vii, 12; viii, 42; ix, 39; xiii, 16; John ix. It was so through all His ministry. Anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power, He went about doing good and healing all that were oppressed of the devil, for God was with Him (Acts x, 38). They could not but wonder at His gracious words, and yet they could not forget that He was their own townsman, who had been brought up in their midst, whom they had seen and known day by day for nearly thirty years. Had He not made and mended their plows and yokes many a time? What could He mean by His reference of that Scripture to Himself? Whom did He think Himself to be? Truly they knew Him not; but, oh, if they only had believed His word and inquired of Him more fully and meekly, how grand it might have been for them! What a heartache as we would say! Israel hearts gave him, drawing from Him such words as: "Oh, that they were wise, that they understood, that they would consider!" "If thou hadst known!" "How often would I, . . . and ye would not!" "Israel would none of me" (Deut. xxxii, 29; Luke xix, 42; Matt. xxiii, 37; Ps. lxxxii, 11). How patient and long suffering He has been! But there is a limit, and so they have been scattered now these many centuries, and He has been keeping silence, bearing with His church and the nations and the devil, but there was a sentence in Isaiah which He did not read that day at Nazareth. He stopped just as He came to it and shut the book.

We are still living in the acceptable year of the Lord and still waiting for the day of vengeance of our God upon His enemies and the time to comfort all who mourn in Zion (Isa. lxi, 2, 3; lxxiii, 4). See Ps. l, 1-3; Isa. lxxvi, 15, 16. They seem to have been offended not only at His saying, but also because He did not in their town some of the mighty works He had done at Capernaum. He reminded them that in the days of Elijah and Elisha it was not a widow or a leper in Israel who was in a special manner helped, but a widow of Sidon and a leper from Syria, although at that time there were many widows and lepers in Israel. It seems strange that when people of their own will cut themselves off from blessings they grow angry because they are not blessed. But such is the perversity of the carnal mind, which is enmity against God. These words about Elijah and Elisha filled them with wrath, and they would have killed Him had He not slipped away from them.

(19.) Verses 25-27—In what way do these verses convey a refusal to work miracles at Nazareth?

(20.) Verses 28-30—Why is it that in all ages when men of God have taught the truth that so many professedly religious people have been angered?

(21.) How do you account for the anger of these people at the words Jesus had spoken to them?

We do "Printing that Pleases."

A MARK OF DISTINCTION.

"I attended a party last night where some of the most prominent society people in this town were present."

"Oh, there's nothing so wonderful about that. I have often attended parties where prominent society people were present."

"But this was a very exclusive affair. The young ladies were all beautiful debutantes."

"That's nothing to boast about. I've attended such parties, too."

"Yes, but there was another remarkable thing about it."

"What was that?"

"They didn't dance the grizzly bear or the bunny hug or any of the rest of the dances that the police have been suppressing."

Feminine Alternative.

"Pop?"

"Well, son?"

"Are cities feminine?"

"They are generally referred to as being of the feminine gender. Why do you ask?"

"I was just thinking that there are still hopes for Skowhegan. Painted Post, Skaneateles and a few others to change their names if they don't like them."

AN OCCASION.

"What is the idea of this souvenir dinner the Bensons are giving?"

"It is to celebrate their cook's fiftieth performance."

Doomed.

However shy is Mister Fly,
We soon will spot him;
And soon or late, he'll meet his fate
For we are bound to swat him.

Very Cautious.

"Home, sweet home," hummed the thin citizen softly. "There's no place like home. Now ain't that a fact?"

"Do you advance that as an abstract proposition," inquired the fat citizen cautiously, "or are you trying to get me interested in some home that you have for sale?"

Oh, Will They?

Mrs. Bacon—I see samples of human hair are being collected from all over the world by a French criminologist with a view to classifying them and framing an international standard of nomenclature.
Mr. Bacon—I suppose they'll be able to tell which is switch.

Seems Reasonable.

"Men are not logical."

"How now?"

"Well, my brother says he can't see any sense in suffragettes throwing bricks whereas the chances are that if one of us suffragettes was to hit him with a brick, he would see the justice of our cause immediately."

TWO VALUATIONS.

Brush—Somebody asked Dauber to name a figure for that painting of his. He placed it pretty high, I believe.

Canvas—Yes, and so did the art committee.

Brush—What had they to do with the price?

Canvas—Not the price, but the painting itself. They skied it.

A Rash Little Boom.

A little boom went out to play—
Was brimming full of heated air.
But when a few facts came that way
It just exploded, then and there.

Down the Rhine.

"Don't bother me. How can I read the guide book if you keep pestering me to look at rocks and castles?"

Social Forms and Entertainments

Entertainment for Bride-Elect.

I am to entertain a bride-elect and am puzzled as to what to do in the way of entertainment. What can you suggest?—Romona.

I wonder if you have had either a magazine, book or a "den" shower? At the first the guests decide beforehand what subscriptions to magazines to give, each one contributing 50 cents. This assures pleasure for the whole first year. The book idea is carried out in the same way.

A Young Girl's Question.

Must I send each girl and each boy in the same family a separate invitation? I want to have a party and serve a light luncheon, but I do not want to buy expensive things. Tell me what to have; also can I hand out these invitations when I meet any of the guests?—P. L. M.

Each member of the family must have a separate invitation except husband and wife; they are always one. I judge your party is to be at night and "light luncheons" are not served, that is, under the name of "luncheons." After the theater we say "supper," during the evening we say "refreshments." Luncheon is a daytime meal. It is also hard to have inexpensive things these days, with prices soaring high as the proverbial kite. I'd have coffee and sandwiches or ice cream and cake. Invitations must go by mail or messenger, never handed to the person.

Progressive Candy Jack Straws.

I wish to entertain 12 little boys and girls at an afternoon party. Will you suggest a novel scheme with which to begin the party?—Puzzled Mother.

Provide a quarter of a pound of twisted candy sticks known as "opera" sticks in most candy shops. They come in all colors and there must be a different color for each table, four at a table. A pair of candy tongs must be in readiness for each player and a box for containing the candy "straws." The game is to see how many sticks can be withdrawn from the pile without breaking or throwing the pile into confusion. Progressions are made and the score kept. Children enjoy this entertainment and eating the sticks won is permissible after the game is over and scores settled.

From an "Anxious Girl."

Girls of seventeen wear their hair around the head in braids, or in soft pompadours caught with a bow in the back, the ends turned up underneath or made in soft coils either side the ear, Dutch style. Skirts should be a bit below shoe top. Just tell a boy that you will not kiss him, that you do not approve. If necessary to take arms (and it seldom is) the girl should take the man's or he may take hers to assist her over a dangerous crossing. Eight to ten or ten thirty are calling hours.

The Proper Thing to Do.

What is proper for a young lady to say when introduced to a man at a dance? Also what is the proper form for introducing a young man to a young lady? Please answer through your columns.—Irish Mary.

All the young lady has to say is "I am very glad to meet you, Mr. Jones," and the right way to present a man to a woman is this: "Miss Young, may I present Mr. Jones, who is here on a visit," or "who is anxious to meet you." It is always nice to give some clue to the ones being introduced as to "who is who."

From a Perplexed Girl.

Your columns have been so helpful to others, I would like to have your advice. I have been going with a boy for about two or three months and like him very much and he has told other people he liked me better than any girl he ever knew. When at a "leap year" dance how many dances should I give him? Do you think it considered unladylike to wear small pearl earrings or would they make me look coarse? What should a girl say when asked to have a dance? Is it really wrong to let a boy kiss you if he is in earnest?—Perplexed B.

I hope from henceforth these columns will prove helpful to you and that you will come just as often as questions bother you. It depends upon how many dances there are, I should think you could give him every other one. Girls are wearing earrings now and if small I see no harm, for the ears are not pierced these days and it is only a harmless passing fad to wear them. I think it is really wrong to let a boy kiss you and perhaps you will think I am very prim to say so. If the boy really thinks a lot of you, you can explain in a satisfactory manner why you'd rather not permit familiarity and he will appreciate and understand your situation and like you all the better.

MADAME MERRI.

BRINGS PERKINS INTO THE CASE

Penrose Makes New Charge Before the Senate.

AN ENORMOUS CAMPAIGN FUND

Senate Plainly Startled by Declaration of Pennsylvania That There Is Quite a Lot of Information Leading to the Thought That Some $3,000,000 Was Underwritten by Perkins and Associates to Nominate Roosevelt.

Washington, Aug. 23.—With more startling charges even than those preferred on the floor of the senate the day before, Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania returned to his attack upon Colonel Roosevelt.

Again speaking before his colleagues in the senate, Mr. Penrose charged that a $3,000,000 fund had been underwritten by George W. Perkins and others to make Colonel Roosevelt the nominee of the regular Republican party at Chicago. Senator Penrose also charged in effect that Roosevelt knew when he dictated that letter to Cortelyou instructing the 1904 campaign committee not to accept Standard Oil contributions, that the $100,000 given by the Standard Oil company had been spent and could not be returned.

Senator Reed of Missouri started the day's disclosures by questioning Senator Penrose in regard to the statement he made the day before and called Penrose's attention to the fact that the Archbold letter mentioning the $25,000 payment to him was dated Oct. 13, 1904. "Can the senator state whether the $100,000 which was also paid by the Standard Oil people was paid on or prior to the 13th day of October?" queried the Missourian.

"My understanding," replied Penrose, "was that it was paid on or about that time, or a little time before that."

The Cortelyou Letter.

Mr. Reed then asked the Pennsylvania what he had to say to the statement of Colonel Roosevelt, in which the latter quoted a letter written by him in October, 1904, warning George B. Cortelyou, his national chairman, not to accept any contribution from the Standard Oil company and to return the money if the contribution had been made. According to the statement Cortelyou informed him no contribution had been made.

"The Roosevelt letter," said the Pennsylvania senator, "was sent about a week before the election. It was several weeks after both the transactions to which I referred yesterday, namely the payment of $100,000 to Mr. Bliss, and the declaration of a request for a further amount of $100,000."

"Had the money been spent, or was it on hand and was it, in fact returned?" asked the Missouri senator.

Mr. Penrose replied that his information was that the money had been spent and could not be returned. Penrose's information was that the letter was written with knowledge that the money was drawn.

In reply to a further question by Mr. Reed, Mr. Penrose said that he did not know of any large sum of money that was contributed to the national Republican committee in 1904 that was returned.

"I should like to recall to the recollection of the senator," said Penrose, "that Mr. Perkins had been wounded in the service of his master, that he was indicted for the application of the funds of widows and orphans interested in life insurance companies and was acquitted on a demurrer, the funds being applied to campaign purposes, and, according to my recollection, being applied in the campaign of 1904."

Brings Perkins Into It.

Reed charged that the steel trust and the Morgan interests are behind Roosevelt at this time. "Do I understand the senator to refer," broke in Penrose, "to the expenditure in the recent primaries for nomination for president?"

"I have not yet," replied Reed, "but if the senator has any light on the subject I should be glad to have him turn it on."

"I should be very glad to advise the senator," said Penrose, "that there is quite a lot of information leading to the thought that some $3,000,000 was underwritten by Mr. Perkins and his associates to nominate Mr. Roosevelt for president for their own personal purposes. I expect that there will be those having the proof who will endeavor to submit it to the proper committee of investigation of the senate at the proper time."

The senate was plain startled at this announcement. After some debate the Penrose resolution calling for an investigation, together with the amendment proposing that the inquiry be extended to campaign contributions in the last primary, came up for a vote, but on objection by Senator Poinsett, a Roosevelt supporter, it went over.

Preposterous, Says Perkins.

New York, Aug. 23.—When the statement of Senator Penrose regarding an underwriting of $3,000,000 to enable Colonel Roosevelt to capture the Republican national convention was read to George W. Perkins he said: "It is a preposterous statement without a word of truth in it."

NO MORE OF MERRIE ENGLAND FOR "KID"

Norman Selby Puts Pressure On the Britons.

London, Aug. 23.—The American pugilist, Norman Selby, better known as Kid McCoy, who was discharged in Bow street police court when re-arraigned on accusation of complicity in a jewel theft from the Princess of Thurn and Taxis at Ostend, will sail for New York tomorrow. He went to the American embassy officials today to ask their advice as to whether he should institute proceedings against the Belgian government for false arrest, in London or at Washington. The kid is very bitter over the indignity which he has suffered. He said that he had built up a nice business in physical culture. Continuing, McCoy said:

"This stigma, with the publication under the biggest headlines of a story that I was suspected of complicity in a jewel robbery, destroyed my business. I was treated as a common thief upon the word of a drunken woman which she repudiated when she became sober. I do not believe the woman ever made a statement implicating me in the robbery; I believe the Belgian police, on learning that there had been a robbery, used every means to strengthen the case against those whom they thought might be implicated."

McCoy went on to say: "I have just received word that the latest development of the case is that there is no evidence against anyone arrested at Ostend, and the present theory is that the jewels were taken by a member of the princess's own family."

Asked what he intended to do in the United States, McCoy said he proposed to start on a lecture tour on health. The "kid" is thoroughly disgusted with England.

MARKING TIME

Peking Is Anxiously Awaiting the Arrival of Dr. Sun.

Peking, Aug. 23.—Peking is marking time apparently pending the arrival of Dr. Sun Yat Sen. The demands for the impeachment of the president and the minister of war, however, continue.

Sun Yat Sen is reported to have left Chefoo for Tientsin. Deputations of police guards and detectives are leaving Tientsin to meet Sun Yat Sen at Teku.

The killing of two Americans by the rebel forces in Nicaragua after they had been wounded in a battle and were being conveyed to a hospital, has aroused the indignation of government officials.

"Senator Penrose may go down and out, but he will drag Bill Flinn with him," is a sentiment widely voiced in Pennsylvania political circles following Penrose's sensational exposure in the senate.

BOYS CONFESS A HORRID CRIME

Deliberately Stone Companion to Death.

SHOCKING CASE AT KANSAS CITY

In Company With Four Other Boys, the Oldest of Whom Was Ten, Little Joseph Timmerman, Aged Four, Went Bug Hunting Last Sunday—His Body With Skull Crushed Has Been Taken From Improvised Grave.

Kansas City, Aug. 23.—With four other boys, little Joseph Timmerman, four years old, left his home last Sunday afternoon to hunt bugs on the cliff drive. His mother was away from home visiting relatives, his father was at work, and Joe joined the bug-hunting expedition, which was to receive 50 cents for each 100 specimens taken to a student of entomology. The boys said at first that Joseph followed them up the steps to Cliff drive. He lagged behind and they went on without him, they said. The search for the little fellow ended yesterday afternoon, when the body of the child was found murdered. The skull had been crushed in as if from being struck by a stone, and an improvised grave held the child's form.

"Little Joseph had not been a favorite with his playmates," said Mrs. Susie Riffe, grandmother of the murdered boy. "They frequently threw stones at him."

He had been gone only a few hours when some of the boys came to Mrs. Timmerman and told her where Joe had disappeared. They led her up to the exact spot where he was buried. There they told that he had strayed off into the weeds. She stood within three feet of the body. Brush and dirt had been pulled down over the spot until nothing unusual could be discerned. They took her again to the same place the next day and again pointed out where he disappeared. But they did not tell her that he lay buried at her feet.

The five playmates of four-year-old Joseph Timmerman, who were with him at the time of his disappearance, were taken to the police station. They are: John Farley, aged ten; George Donahue, nine; Rowland Franka, seven; John Heinberger, ten, and Charles Middleton, ten. They showed no fright. Little surprise was expressed at the information of Joseph's death.

John Farley and John Heinberger, after telling many conflicting stories, finally admitted the deed. They said they alone were responsible. They said they stood at the top of the steps on Cliff drive and threw stones down at Joe. The boys are being held.

Returns to Command of Department of the East.

A FURTHER LEAD IN GOTHAM GRAFT CASES

Two More Trails to Safe Deposit Boxes.

New York, Aug. 23.—It is said that a graft connection between an influential civilian employee of the police department and an inspector who owed his promotion to the employee, has been established by District Attorney Whitman. It has been learned that the ununiformed official had two safe deposit boxes and a bank account, and that the inspector had three bank accounts and a safe deposit box. The withdrawals from the inspector's bank accounts and the visits of the official to his safe deposit boxes tally precisely as to dates. These men and a second uptown inspector will be indicted, it is announced.

The grand jury by unanimous vote indicted Detectives James C. White and John C. Steinert for oppression and perjury. The evidence showed that they had placed a revolver in Jack Zelig's pocket and had sworn to a lie before a jury. Steinert was placed in the Toms. Detectives are looking for White. Both were suspended from the police department.

Five of the seven men indicted for the murder of Herman Rosenthal were arraigned before Judge Mulqueen. Lieut. Becker refused to plead. Frank Muller (Whitey Lewis), Frank Cirofici (Dago Frank), Jack Sullivan and William Shapiro pleaded not guilty. A coroner's jury, with Daniel Frohman as foreman, returned a formal verdict in the inquest and Louis Libby was discharged from custody.

The district attorney, representing Justice Goff, obtained a panel of fifty for the special session of the grand jury that will act with the supreme court, over which Justice Goff will preside, beginning Sept. 3.

IN SIMPLE STATE

No Flowers on the Late General Booth's Bier.

London, Aug. 23.—The body of the late General Booth was removed from his residence last evening to Congress hall, Clapton, where it is lying in state today and will continue so tomorrow. The body is clothed in the familiar braided frock coat and scarlet jersey, which owing to the fact that the general wasted a great deal during his long illness, look strangely too large. The hands are crossed. There are no flowers on the casket and everything is of the simplest nature. All day a continuous stream of mourners has been passing the bier.

CHICAGO SPORTS TO BE CHECKED

Governor Marshall Will Not Stand for Them.

NO RACE TRACK GAMBLING

Club of Chicago Men Organized Under Laws of South Dakota to Operate a Racetrack in Lake County Will Be Called on to Face an Injunction Against Their Alleged Purpose of Evading the Laws of Indiana.

Indianapolis, Aug. 23.—Governor Marshall has instructed Thomas M. Honan, attorney general, to prepare a plea for injunction against the Mineral Springs Jockey club, which is preparing to operate a racetrack at Porter, Lake county, to prevent the races being carried out. The plea will be based on the allegations that the club was organized in an effort to evade the criminal laws against race-track gambling.

The governor declined to reveal the source of complaint received by him in regard to the club. According to information filed with him, the club was organized under the laws of South Dakota for the purpose of operating a racetrack and other amusement enterprises at Porter. The incorporators were members of the Chicago sporting fraternity.

"I have not much longer to be governor," Mr. Marshall said, "but while I am governor there will be no race-track gambling in the state if I can prevent it. While I may not be able to prevent individuals from breaking or evading the law, I can prevent corporations from doing it. I have instructed the attorney general to prepare the plea for injunction, basing his plea on the allegation that the club was incorporated for the purpose of evading the Indiana criminal laws, and that if the club's purpose is carried out the laws will be evaded and the criminal courts will be unable to punish those seeking to set the law aside."

The plea for injunction will be filed in the Lake circuit court as soon as the attorney general can complete the papers.

Monon Road Discovers Evidence of Padded Payrolls.

Lafayette, Ind., Aug. 23.—It is said that Monon railroad officials who have been with the pay car on its trip over the route have discovered that men long dead have been carried on the payroll and that someone else has been getting the money. For many years the company has been paying by check, and this week was the first time a pay car has been used. When certain men did not call for their money, others are said to have informed the officials that they were dead. Their checks, formerly sent by mail, evidently had been cashed by others. President Fairfax of the road is with the pay car. It is also said loan sharks have been making big profits off employees. As the result of the discoveries it is said there will be several changes in the heads of departments on the Monon.

That Is What Clark's Friends Say of His Perpetual Motion Machine.

Terre Haute, Ind., Aug. 23.—Frank Clark of this city, inventor of a perpetual motion machine, has been at work on his invention for twenty years, spending every minute of his spare time on the machine. Clark says he has built two machines that have run without stopping until the woodwork rotted. Weights are used to generate power. The main wheel is 48 inches in diameter, is made of chilled steel and weighs about 200 pounds. There are many small wheels, cogs and pulleys arranged about the main wheel. Men who have seen the machine say it runs under its own power. Mr. Clark is one of the members of the company which has just been incorporated at Indianapolis at $100,000 to manufacture the machine.

Horse Frightened to Death.

Muncie, Ind., Aug. 23.—Literally "scared to death" was the fate of a valuable horse owned and driven by John Richardson, when the animal was confronted suddenly on a lonely country road by a swiftly approaching automobile, with its lights gleaming and its horn blowing. The animal, trembling with fright, walked about forty feet and fell over dead of heart failure, due to fright.

THE AMERICAN FLAG INTO MEXICAN PORTS

More Than a Year Since It Has Been Seen There.

Washington, Aug. 23.—The revolution in Mexico is sufficiently broken, President Taft has decided, for this government to resume its custom of carrying the American flag into Mexican ports by the friendly visit of warships. The gunboat Vicksburg has been ordered to proceed at once down the west coast of Mexico and the cruiser Des Moines will go as early as possible down the east coast. The Vicksburg has left San Diego for Guaymas on the gulf of California. After stopping there for a short time, the Vicksburg will proceed to La Paz, Mazatlan, Manzanillo and Salina Cruz, Mexico.

The Vicksburg was hurriedly placed in commission a few days ago at San Francisco and sent to San Diego to await final orders. This will be the first visit of American warships to Mexico in more than a year.

SILVER JUBILEE

Father Curran's Celebration Closed With Address by Roosevelt.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 23.—The celebration marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of the ordination of Father J. J. Curran to the priesthood culminated last night with an address delivered by former President Roosevelt in the Ninth regiment armory before an enthusiastic audience of fully 4,000 people. Colonel Roosevelt's address dealt chiefly with moral issues in the light of Father Curran's accomplishments among the diverse races represented in his parish, particularly with reference to temperance reform and improvement of the conditions of labor. At the close of his speech the colonel launched into a bitter attack upon Senator Boies Penrose, which was greeted with applause by his surprised audience.

Mob Threatened Boy.

Logansport, Ind., Aug. 23.—Lawrence Cogley, aged sixteen, son of William Cogley, a farmer, assaulted the seventeen-year-old daughter of Sherman Tibbets, living five miles west of Logansport. He attacked the girl as she was driving cows to pasture and was caught soon after. Cogley was promptly identified by the girl and he acknowledged his guilt. He was rushed to the county jail to prevent threatened mob violence.

THE PARDON LAW.

Since the arrest of Oliver Snyder, the young Brown county burglar, by Chief of Police Abell, many of our citizens have condemned the practice of pardoning a large number of prisoners from the state penal institutions, and thus throwing back upon society the men who have been convicted as undesirables and who are dangerous to the public.

The case of the former school teacher has been pointed out as a fair example. He was arrested after a series of crimes, and sentenced in an adjoining county for a term of from ten to twenty years, yet after serving just a little more than two years he is paroled.

In speaking of this editorially the Columbus Republican has the following:

Another of Gov. Marshall's proteges has come to grief. It seems that the tender hearted Governor just simply can't keep a notorious criminal in prison. Apparently it is a mania of his to undo the work of the courts, which sentence law breakers to the penitentiary. His use of the pardoning power has become an abuse and the latest proof of the assertion is found in the case of Oliver Snyder, the notorious young Brown county housebreaking, rapist and bad man generally, who came to grief in Seymour Wednesday morning.

Snyder, who was sentenced to the Jeffersonville reformatory for from ten to twenty years by Judge Shea of the Scott Circuit Court for wholesale housebreaking and for attempting the life of the Scottsburg city marshal, was released from prison only two months ago after serving but a little over two years of his minimum sentence. Hardly had he regained his freedom until he resumed his evil way. He has been identified as the beast who broke into two homes in this city recently and who threatened and made indecent proposals to unprotected women. His success in eluding arrest for these offenses evidently emboldened him to renewed activity along his chosen line of criminal work, but his trip to Seymour resulted disastrously for him.

In trying to elude capture after breaking into a number of Seymour homes, in two of which he also tried criminal assault, he was wounded by the chief of police and the wound necessitated the amputation of one of his legs.

Public indignation because of the flagrancy of his offenses in Seymour threatened summary vengeance at the hands of a mob, so the tender hearted governor was again importuned in behalf of the young outlaw and he was spirited back to the reformatory there to be nursed back to health and strength that he may again be turned loose by Governor Marshall to prey on some community.

THE VETERAN'S BEST FRIEND.

At a recent regimental reunion a squad of Republican veterans were discussing the political situation, when finally one of them said: "Comrades fifty years ago we took an oath to protect and defend the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic. We did defend it against the most determined foe men ever met. Our nation lived, we returned to our homes, and under the constitution our nation has grown prosperous, powerful and rich, beyond all others. That constitution is now in danger, not from an open, frank and brave attack, but cunningly in the name of the people to satisfy the selfish ambition of one man. Its representative republican character is to be destroyed, its fundamental bulwarks of liberty are to be overthrown, and the wild doctrines of socialism established instead. We have stood side by side for fifty years aiding in the marvelous growth of our country, under the banner of Republicanism. We are now asked to forsake our party, and to join hands with ex-rebels in forming a new one.

When we lay in southern fields, hospitals and prisons, we trusted Lincoln, Grant, Sherman and Morton to protect and provide for us. We trusted them to defend our mothers, sisters, wives and children from insult during our absence. The Republican party gave good pensions to disabled soldiers and to the widows and children of the dead. It has provided homes for the old and needy—it has never shirked its duty to our country or its defenders. It has been good enough for me in the past, it is good enough now. This may be my last penniless and helpless, if the future were dark and cheerless, if ahead I could see nothing but gloom and despair, I might take my own life, but it shall not be said of me that I turned traitor to my best friend—that my last act was to stab at the life of the Grand Old Party."

The Republicans of Jackson county should give their undivided support to the county and state tickets for if any other plan is followed the Democrats will get a more secure hold on county affairs than ever before. The Republicans have given the state far better administrations than the Democrats, as seen by the term of Governor Marshall. During his service as the chief executive the state has been plunged into indebtedness although the Republican left almost two million dollars in the sinking fund. A division of opinion upon national politics should not be carried to the counties, and it is fair to believe that the majority of Republicans view the situation in this light.

While a rock pile might entail a little extra expense the results would undoubtedly be worth it as the city and county would be freed of tramps and professional hoboese, and too, the prisoners who are sentenced in the police court would not be so anxious to visit the Brownstown jail. Under the present system the county is required to furnish good food and lodging for the prisoners and many of them would rather live at the jail than follow their usual vocation of begging and stealing.

TRAMPS AVOID WORK AND COME TO SEYMOUR

Well Advertised That Jackson County Does Not Conduct a Rock Pile.

Why is it that so many tramps and hobos in southern Indiana strike for Seymour? This is a question that a good many Seymour people are asking in view of the fact that the city is visited each week by a large number of these men. One reason of course why Seymour is a popular meeting point for the tramps is that it is a good railroad center and the hobos come here in order to catch the freight trains for the various cities which they desire to make. Of course while they are here they spend a day or two and as result can be counted by the score many times. Unquestionably most of the petty thefts which has been reported, can be laid to the door of these undesirable visitors, as in their travels about the city they find places which are not protected and afford a good opportunity for getting away with everything which is not chained to the ground. There are several places where the tramps congregate when they reach the city and the people believe that the police could do some work by visiting such places several times during the day and firing the tramps from the city. A good many cities in Indiana will not permit these men to remain within the corporate limits and if strict orders were given them here for a short time the news would soon be circulated that Seymour was not a good town for them.

Another thing which has been given wide publicity among the tramps is that Seymour or Jackson county does not conduct a rock pile, and as these men are not especially fond of labor they would rather take the chances of being arrested here than in some other places where they would be given a good sized hammer and a pile of rocks and put to work.

A number of citizens have reported that there have been an unusually large number of tramps and professional beggars here during the past few days and any move which the police would make along this line would receive the hearty support of the people.

Heart to Heart Talks.

HIS HANDICAP.

If you were starting out in the world as a beginner would you begin by throwing $5,000 into the river?

That is what John Lavery, the Scottish artist, did.

When he set out on his journey to success as an artist he deliberately threw a £1,000 note into the Clyde.

Why? Because he feared his money might prove a handicap. He knew he needed the spur of poverty in order to do his best work.

To say the least, the cure was a heroic one. And perhaps he was logical.

He knew himself better than any one else and doubtless was wise in concluding that so long as he had money to live on he would lack incentive.

However that may be, the rare logic of the Scottish artist may contribute to the encouragement of the poor boy who is struggling through discouragement or failure.

You have no money handicap? The rich man's son usually fails because of his money. Having plenty, there is too much temptation to take things easy, to put off the disagreeable, to loiter on the way toward achievement. "What's the use?" queries the man who is not obliged.

He who is driven to accomplishment by no other incentive than that of his own inclination is a rare man.

Moreover, some one has said it is a good thing that a man should fail in his first business venture. Certain it is that most successful men have come up through failure.

Failure is experience. And experience educates.

Blinded by the dust of the battle which he has lost, the young man concludes that when the battle is lost all is lost. He has yet to learn that the battle is only one in the series of the campaign.

By and by, pondering over his first defeat, he discovers where his line was weak or where he failed to move at the right moment. Having learned his mistake, ere long he is up and at it again—no less zealous, but more wary.

You need not throw away your money in order to begin properly.

There are a lot of people who will aid you if you desire to do that.

But if you have lost your first little fortune do not let the small matter frighten you. And if you have no little fortune to lose do not let that deter you.

It is a fine thing to be young and strong—and poor.

Religious Conversation

By Rev. Howard W. Pope

Superintendent of Men, Moody Bible Institute Chicago

TEXT: Only let your conversation be as becometh the Gospel of Christ.—Phil. 1:27.

Talking is one of the things that many people do not consider themselves responsible for. It costs so little, and is so common, that the world does not appreciate its value. But if our Savior's words be true, that for "every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account in the day of judgment," talking is pretty serious business.

It is said of Samuel that "The Lord let none of his words fall to the ground." In other words, none of them were lost, but all found their way to their proper destination, did their appointed work and returned laden with blessing to the God who gave them.

In the Saviour's prayer recorded in John 17, He says, "Father I have finished, the work which Thou gavest Me to do." Finished! Not a word left unsaid, not a deed undone, of all that was given Him to do. How unfinished and incomplete do our lives seem in comparison.

Talking is a very potent agency for good. When we see how persuasive and forceful some men are in presenting a business proposition, how eloquent in pleading a political cause, we cannot but wish that their talents were consecrated to the service of Christ. And whatever one may think about women speaking in meeting, certainly out of meeting women have a fluency and fervor which would make them valuable allies of any cause which they might espouse.

A single word fitly spoken has often changed one's whole career. Said a noble man, "If I have been happy or useful in the world, it is due largely to a chance question from a stranger. I was a poor boy and a cripple. Watching a game of ball one day with envious feelings, a man at my side said to me, 'You wish you were in the place of those boys, do you not?' 'Yes, I do,' was the answer. 'I reckon God gave them their money and health to enable them to be of some use in the world. Did it ever occur to you that He gave you your lame leg for the same reason, to make a man of you?' I did not reply. But I could not get his words out of my mind. My crippled leg God's gift, to teach me patience and strength! I did not believe it, but I was a thoughtful boy, and the more I thought of it the more I was convinced that the stranger had told the truth. It worked on my temper, my thoughts and at last upon my actions. The idea has sweetened and blessed all my life."

Christian conversation seems to be almost a lost art in some quarters. How seldom does one hear the subject broached in public places like a drawing room, or at a dinner party even when all the people present are professing Christians! Riding in the cars with a stranger one day I opened the subject of religion. After a while he admitted that he was a member of a church. "If that is the case," I said, "why didn't you talk to me like a Christian, and not compel me to work so long to find out your position?" "People don't do that down our way," said he. "I would speak to a man who came into my store, on the subject of religion, what do you suppose he would think of me?" "He would probably think you were a Christian," I replied. "Well, no one talks about religion down our way, not even the ministers. We never hear from them on the subject, except from the pulpit."

That Christians do not talk more about the things of the Kingdom is a constant surprise to the unsaved, and often an occasion of doubt. Said a skeptical lady to a friend of mine, "I will tell you why I am a doubter. I was in a sewing society last week. Forty ladies were present and every one a church member except myself. I was there three hours. We talked of everything down to crazy patchwork, but not a word about Jesus. I cannot believe that they see in Jesus Christ any such beauty or power as you speak of. I am convinced that there is a great deal of sham in the profession of Christian people."

That it requires tact and skill to carry on religious conversation, no one can deny, but is it not worth while to study the art until we become proficient in it? If we follow Paul's advice to the Colossians, we shall always have something to say. If we begin each day with David's prayer, "Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer," we shall keep in touch with God. And if we watch for souls as those that must give an account, we shall have opportunities enough so that, in a short time, we shall find Christian conversation a real pleasure to ourselves and a blessing to others.

Mother's Ideas

By ELEANOR C. MARSH, Los Angeles, Cal.

If my daughter is bitten by the matrimony bug at the age of 17 I shall sigh for the days, the good old days, when the parents of refractory maidens were wont to shut them into their rooms to think over their foolishness on bread and water. That is the course I should like to pursue, but, living as I do in these days, when the new commandment, "Parents, obey your children," has been given unto us, I shall probably not be allowed any "say" in the matter at all. Still, like little Mary, "I can't help finkin'," and here are some of my "foughts."

Is a girl of seventeen old enough to marry? Well, just think of the seventeen-year-olds of your acquaintance—little giggly, gushy high school girls, immature in body, mind and soul. Think of marrying one of them! Think of being married to one of them!

A girl of seventeen hasn't a thought of any one but herself. Her pompadour, her complexion, her figure, her character (with a capital C, if you please), constitute her sole interests in life. This is all very natural. Youth is inevitably selfish and self-centered. I am not criticising Miss Seventeen; I am only protesting against piling the burdens of wifehood and motherhood upon her slender young shoulders.

Don't, don't force the child into premature womanhood as a careless hand presses open a rosebud. Such a blossom is always blighted and withers much sooner than the bud which blooms naturally. Let the girl grow into womanhood before she assumes its obligations.

The wife at seventeen is usually a middle-aged woman at twenty-five, while her sister who has remained single until that age is still in her lovely girlhood, and at thirty-five will be no older than the early married woman at twenty-five.

The girl at twenty-five hard and cynical! The cynical ones at that age are the married women who have outlived their illusions and seen their idols decay. If by sheer luck the young wife has chosen a good husband, the wifely duties so early assumed will have aged her far more than if she had been prepared for them.

But she is much less apt to get a good husband than her twenty-five-year-old sister. Usually he will be only a boy, with no more capacity to bear and forbear than she. Friction between them will be more frequent and neither will understand how either to meet or avoid it. A pitifully large number of early marriages end in the divorce courts, while those who defer marriage until twenty-five or over are usually married for life.

At twenty-five a woman doesn't accept her suitor because he has "lovely eyes" or a Grecian nose, but because he is a man of honor, of high principles and ideas, who will be a good husband and father. For corresponding reasons he loves her, and their love founded upon such a rock endures.

Faithful Office Worker Often Passed By

By A. Rubinstine, New York

To those who contemplate a season of "roughing it" I would say that elaborate camping outfits and preparations defeat the very ends sought. If one camps out for pleasure, the pleasure may reasonably be supposed to consist in the differences between camp life and living luxuriously at home. The joy of roughing it, to me, is in reducing life to its simplest terms and pitting human resources and ingenuity against primitive conditions.

This is the camp equipment my "partner" and I used to take in frequent expeditions: A blanket and poncho for bedding and shelter; for tools, a hand ax and a moderately heavy jack-knife. Weapons, a shotgun, with shells adapted to various kinds of game, and a small caliber rifle for "sportsmanlike" hunting of squirrels, and such "small deer." Our larder contained salt pork, corn meal, sugar, beans and occasionally dried apricots. Two pipes and plenty of tobacco completed our outfit.

For the delicacies of the table we depended upon what we could catch or kill and it was an unwritten law that we should not kill more than we could use from day to day, leaving the "big game" until we were about ready to return to town, when we could take that with us for gifts. To live well and comfortable we had to hunt close and work hard. Sometimes we built a shack that would house us against the roughest weather.

These expeditions were achievements in that they brought our facilities in triumphant conflict with elemental conditions and with few of the tools of civilization to aid.

Unjust to College Men As Class

By Joseph J. Mills, Portland, Ore.

The indictment that college graduates do not make desirable farm help because of their indolence and indifference to their work, brought by the New York State department of agriculture, is not a fair one. College men who are lazy and indifferent about work on a farm would be lazy and indifferent about their work in any other vocation. If the New York department of agriculture has found lazy and incompetent men among university graduates, it should be charged against them as individuals—not against the fact that they are college graduates.

The employe on the farm who would play the mandolin or rest in the shade during the hours he should be at work, would watch the clock and soldier on the job wherever he might be—even though it might be in mahogany-furnished offices. Undoubtedly such men "cut" classes when students and use a "pony" to assist them in their translations. They are simply 50-cent boys into which hopeful parents are trying to cram a $5,000 education. It isn't the fault of the education if it can't be done.

The number of college men who are making a success of farming is much larger than the layman thinks. In fact, the agricultural districts of the richest portions of our country are filled with college men.

Hood River, Oregon, distinctly a fruit-growing community, has more college men in proportion to the total number of inhabitants than any other community in this country.

It was a university man who discovered that Texas could grow the famous Bermuda onion—a fact that the state has celebrated within the past week or two.

Heart of a Child

"Have you any boys?"

I was accosted thus by a mite of a lad with dusty shoes and lunch box in hand at 4 o'clock, as I walked along a quiet country road. I was on my way to the postoffice half a mile distant. He was going home from school, I inferred from his box and the time of day.

Now, I have no boys, and I love boys, and I did not like to tell the truth about it and answer directly, so I fenced. "Why, are you out looking for boys, laddie?" I smilingly questioned in return.

His blue eyes looked up into mine with the sweetest, shyest look from under the longest of curved lashes, and his little round freckled nose was tipped sideways in the friendliest way, while his lips began to draw down in proper shape to make a business reply. "Yes, ma'am, I have some tickets to sell. They're 10 cents, and you can see the ball game."

"Oh," said I. "Are you going?"

"No, I guess not. It's way down town, an the big boys are going to play, some from our own school."

"Oh, I see. And if you sell five, perhaps you could have a ticket for yourself," said I.

"Oh, yes, teacher said if any one sold five he could have a ticket free. But I don't guess I'll sell five—I don't know anybody 'at has five boys."

I became more interested. I didn't want to miss that ball game, and I wanted him to see it. So I thought I would try to get a boy. "Do you know of any boy I could get to take me to that ball game?" said I, with all the intensity I could put into my manner.

"Well, no ma'am, I don't know any just now—less Jim could go—he works for Mr. Ward next house to us," he said with such sweet concern, hoping to sell a ticket.

"But you see, I don't know Jim. I'd rather take some one I know, and we could both see the game. Now, I don't suppose you could take me, could you, if I bought the tickets and paid the street car fare and all? You see, I don't like to go alone, and I don't know any boys but you."

Downcast eyes fringed with black lashes gave a proper modesty to the eagerness of his reply. "Yes, ma'am, I think I could do it, if you'd like to see the game."

So the time and place of meeting was arranged, the two tickets paid for, and I went on my way to the post office. I was really happily excited.

That boy had awakened a feeling of youth in me that had been a stranger for some years. I wanted to see the ball game—I wanted a child's companionship—I was impatient for the appointed day.

My escort arrived early on Saturday, just as I finished my lunch, ringing the bell with a timid hand. I spied him through the window and went to the door myself. I did not want any one to come between our new and growing confidence. That shy lifting of the eyes greeted me, and I at once brought out Felix, my little terrier, who is friendly and a good entertainer. I left the two on the porch while I got my hat, gloves and my pink tickets.

When I returned, Felix had a new friend. "I like your dog," said "my boy." (I had never asked his name.) "You don't want to sell him, do you?" he asked in a truly business tone.

"No," said I, "he's my burglar alarm."

"Oh, course," said he.

We boarded a car, and I was more delightfully entertained during that half hour than I had been for many a day.

"Pa said for me to be sure and thank you for my ride and the ticket, and I guess I better do it now. I might forget, you know, if I have a perfectly splendid time."

"Your papa is a gentleman, and you give him my best wishes for many happy returns of the day."

He looked earnestly at me. "I guess I can't remember all that."

"Then tell him you did not forget," I said, and he was satisfied.

The excitement of passing the charmed ticket man and walking up that long road to the benches with his little warm hand in mine was delightful. My pulses beat with his, my eyes saw with his eyes, my feet kept time with his.

And then the game—how we did shout and wave our handkerchiefs, and stand up to get the best view! I was as merry as my boy of eight. I didn't want the game to come to an end—but alas! it did. We went home tired, but happy.

"Good-by," he said, at my gate.

"Good-by, laddie," said I. "Come in and see Felix next Saturday."

"All right," he called, as his feet kicked up the dust in the road.

I was alone with my thoughts. "And whoso shall receive one such little child receiveth me."

Quite Willing.

Banker (to his daughter's suitor)—Please tell me frankly. Are you marrying my Selma for her money?

Suitor—Oh, no, not at all. In fact, that's one reason why I've been so long about it. Her money seemed a hindrance to me.

Banker—Yet you're quite willing to take the hindrance, I suppose?—Flegende Blaetter.

Practical Fashions

LADY'S ONE-PIECE CORSET COVER

One of the simplest corset covers to fashion is shown in this model. It is cut in one piece and fastens at the back. It is finished with half sleeves and a peplum and is dainty as well as practical. For developing the design lawn, nainsook, cambric, batiste or swiss may be used. The neck may be scalloped and embroidered or it may be finished with a bit of edging.

"She said that you and Mrs. Ryan were offering her money—a good deal of money, three hundred thousand dollars was the amount, I think—to leave her husband so that he could get a divorce from her, and then—"she swallowed as if to swallow down this last unbearable indignity—"and then be free to marry me."

So Berny had told all. If deep, unspoken curses could have killed her, she would have died that moment.

"Is it true?" Rose asked.

"Well, yes," said the old man in a perfectly natural tone of dubious consideration, "it's a fairly accurate statement."

"Oh, papa," cried his daughter, "how could you have done it? How could you have done such a thing? Such a hateful, horrible thing."

"Horrible thing?" he repeated with an air of almost naive astonishment. "What's horrible about it?"

"You know. I don't have to tell you; you know. Don't say to me that you don't think it's horrible. Don't make me feel as if we were suddenly thousands of miles apart."

The Bonanza King knew that in many matters, in most matters involving questions of ethics, they were more thousands of miles apart than she even now suspected. That was one of the reasons why he would have liked to kill Berny, who, for the first time, had brought this dissimilarity in their points of view to his daughter's unwilling consideration. He spoke slowly and vaguely to gain time. He knew it was a critical moment in the relations between himself and the one creature in the world he loved.

"I don't want you to feel that way, dearie," he said easily. "Maybe there are things in this matter you don't know about or understand. And, anyway, what's there so horrible in trying to separate a man and woman who are unhappily married and can't bear the sight of each other?"

"You were separating them for me," she said in a low voice.

"Well, now," he answered with a slight rocking movement of his shoulders and a manner of almost bluff depreciation, "I can say that I wasn't, but suppose I was?"

She paid no attention to the last part of the sentence, and replied:

"The woman said you were."

He did not answer for a minute, the truth being that he did not know what it was best to say, and wanted to wait and let her make statements that he could either contradict or seek to justify.

"What made you think I wanted to marry Dominick Ryan?" she said slowly, her eyes on the fire.

This was a question that went to the core of the subject. He knew now he could not put her off, or slip from the responsibilities of the occasion. Drawing himself to the edge of his chair, he leaned forward and spoke with a sincerity and feeling that made his words very impressive.

"One evening when I was at Antelope, I came into the sitting-room and saw my daughter in the arms of Dominick Ryan. I knew that my girl wasn't the woman to let a man do that unless she loved him. That was how I came to know."

"Oh," said Rose in a faint tone.

"Afterward I heard from Dominick of what his marriage was. I heard from his mother, too. Then I saw his wife and I got a better idea from her what it was than I did from either of the others. That fellow, the man my daughter cared for, was tied up in a marriage that was hell. He was bound to a woman who could only be managed with a club, and Dominick was not the kind that uses a club to a woman. What liking he'd had for her was gone. She stuck to him like a barnacle because she wanted to get money, was ready to bang on, feet and hands, till Della Ryan was dead and then put up a claim for a share of the estate. Do you think a man's doing such a horrible thing to break up a marriage like that?"

"Yes," said Rose. "I do. It was a marriage. They'd taken each other for better or for worse. They'd made the most solemn promises to each other. Neither you nor any one else had a right to interfere."

She spoke with a hard determination, with something of an inflexible, unrelenting positiveness, that was very unusual in her, which surprised and, for the moment, silenced her father. It rose from a source of conviction deeper than the surface emotions of likes and dislikes, of loves and hates, of personal satisfactions and disappointments. At the core of her being, with roots extending through all the ramifications of her mental and moral nature, was a belief in the inviolability of the marriage tie. It was a conviction founded on neither tradition, nor reason, nor expediency, a thing of impulse, of sex, an hereditary instinct inherited from generations of virtuous women, who, in the days of their supremacy, knew that the most sacred possessions of their lives—their husbands, their children, their homes—rested on its stability. All the small, individual preoccupations of her love for Dominick, her pity for his sufferings, were swept aside by this greater feeling that she did not understand or reason about. She obeyed an instinct, elemental as the instinct of motherhood, when she refused to admit his right to break the bond he had contracted.

Her father stared at her for the moment, chilled by a sense of unfamiliarity in her sudden assumption of an attitude of challenge and authority. He had often heard her inveigh against the divorces so lightly obtained in the world about them. He had thought it one of those pretty ornamental prejudices of hers, that so gracefully adorned her youth and that he liked her to have when they did not interfere with anything of importance. Now, set up like a barrier in the path, he stopped before this one particular prejudice, perplexed at its sudden intrusion, unwilling to believe that it was not a frail, temporary obstruction to be put gently aside.

"Now listen, honey," said he persuasively, "that's all very well. I've got no right to interfere, and neither, we'll admit, has anybody. But sometimes you have to push away these little rights and polite customs. They're very nice for every-day use, but they're not for big occasions. I suppose the Good Samaritan didn't really have any right to stop and bind up the wounds of the man he found by the wayside. But I guess the feller he bound up was almighty glad that the Samaritan didn't have such a respect for etiquette and wait till he'd found somebody to introduce them."

"Oh, papa, that was different. Don't confuse me and make me seem a fool. I can't talk like you. I can't express it all clearly and shortly. I only know it's wrong; it's a sin. I wouldn't marry Dominick Ryan if he was divorced that way if it killed me to give him up."

"So if the woman voluntarily took the money and went away and got Dominick to grant her the divorce, Dominick being, as we know, a man of good record and spotless honor, you'd refuse to marry him?"

"I would, certainly I would. It would be perfectly impossible for me to marry him under those circumstances. I should consider I was committing a sin, a particularly horrible and unforgivable sin."

"See here now, Rosey, just listen to me for a minute. Do you know what Dominick Ryan's marriage is? I don't suppose you do. But you do know that he married his mistress, a woman who lived with him eight months before he made her his wife. She wasn't an innocent young girl by any means. She knew all right where she was going. She established that relation with him with the intention of marrying him. She's a damned smart woman, and a damned unscrupulous one. That's not the kind of woman a man feels any particular respect for, or that a girl like you'd give a lot of sympathy to, is it?"

"I don't see that that would make any difference," she said. "I'm not thinking of her character, I'm thinking of her rights."

"And don't her character and her rights sort of dovetail into each other?"

"No, I don't see that they do. The law's above the character or the person. It's the law, without any question of the man or the woman."

"Oh, Rosey, dear, you're talking like a book, not like a girl who's got to live in a world with ordinary people in modern times. This woman, that you're arguing about as if she was the mother of the Gracchi, hasn't got any more morality or principle than you could put on the point of a pin."

"She's been quite good and proper since her marriage."

"Well, now, let's leave her and look at Dominick's side. He marries her honorably and lives with her for nearly three years. Every semblance of affection that he had for her gets rubbed off in those three years, every illusion goes. He's tied to a woman that he can't stand. He went up to Antelope that time because they'd had some sort of a scrap and he felt he couldn't breathe in the same house with her. He told me himself that they'd not lived as man and wife for nearly a year. Now, I don't know what you're going to say, but I think to keep on living in that state is all wrong. I'll borrow your expression, I think it's a sin."

She answered doggedly:

"It's awful, but she's his wife. Oh, if you'd seen her face when she talked to me, her thin, mean, common face.

all painted and powdered and so miserable!"

He thought she was wavering, that he saw in this unreasonable, illogical dodging of the point at issue a sign of defeat, and he pushed his advantage.

"And you—a girl of heart and feeling like you—would condemn that man and woman to go on living that lie, that useless, purposeless lie? I can't understand it. What good comes of it? What's the necessity for it? Do you realize what a man Dominick might be if he were married to the right woman, and had a decent home where he could live like a Christian? Why, he'd be a different creature. He'd have a future. He'd make his place in the community. All the world would be before him, and he'd mount up to where he belongs. And what is he now? Nothing. All the best in him's paralyzed by this hell of a box he's got himself into. The man's just withering up with despair."

It was almost too much. For a moment she did not answer, then said in a small voice like a child's:

"You're making this very hard for me, papa."

"My God, Rosey," he cried, exasperated, "you're making it hard for yourself. It's you with your cast-iron prejudices, and your obstinacy, who are making it hard."

"Well, I've got them," she said, rising to her feet. "I've got them, and they'll stay with me till I die. Nothing's going to change me in this. I can't argue and reason about them. They're part of me."

She approached the mantelpiece, and, leaning a hand on it, looked down at the fire. The light gilded the front of her dress and played on her face, down-drooped and full of stern decision.

"It's quite true," she said slowly, "that I love Dominick. I love him with the best I've got. It's true that I would like to be his wife. It would be a wonderful happiness. But I can't have it, and so there's no good thinking about it, or trying to bring it about. It can't be, and we—you too, papa—must give it up."

He pressed himself back in his chair, looking at her with lowering, somber disapprobation—a look he had seldom had cause to level at his daughter.

"So you're going to condemn this poor devil, who loves you and whom you say you love, to a future that's going to kill any hope in him? You're going to say to him: 'You can be free, and make something of your life, and have the woman you want for your wife, but I forbid all that, and I'm going to send you back to prison.' I can't seem to believe that it's my Rosey who's saying that, and who's so hard and inhuman."

Rose turned from the fire. He noted an expression almost of austerity on her face that was as new to him as the revelation of obstinacy and indifference to his will she had shown tonight.

"Papa, you don't understand what I feel. It's not what you want, or what I want, or what Dominick wants. It's not what's going to please us and make us comfortable and happy. It's something that's much more important than that. I can't make Dominick happy and let him make his life a success at the expense of that woman. I can't take him out of prison, as you call it, because he's got a responsibility in the prison, that he voluntarily took on himself, and that he's got to stand by. A man can't stay by his marriage only as long as it's pleasant. He can't throw down the woman he's made his wife just because he finds he doesn't like her. If she's been disagreeable that's a misfortune, but it doesn't liberate him from the promises he's made."

"Then you think when a man like Dominick Ryan, hardly more than a boy, makes a mistake that ruins his life, he's got to stay by it?"

"Neither You Nor Anyone Else Had a Right to Interfere."

"Yes, he must. He's given a solemn promise. He must keep it. Mistake or sin doesn't matter."

The old man was silent. He had presented his case as strongly and persuasively as he knew how, and he had lost it. There was no longer any use in arguing with that unshakable feminine obstinacy, rooted, not in reason but in something rock-like, off which the arguments of reason harmlessly glanced. He had a dim, realizing sense that at the bottom of the woman's illogical, whim-driven nature, there was that indestructible foundation of blind, governing instincts, and that in them lay her power.

"I guess that lets me out," he said, turning to knock off the long ash on his cigar. "I guess there's no use, Rosey, for you and me to try to come to an agreement on this matter."

"No, there isn't. And don't let's talk about it any more." She turned from the fire and came toward him. "But you must promise me one thing—that that woman is to be let alone, that no one—you or any one you have any control over—makes any more offers of money to her."

She came to a stand beside his chair. He wanted to hold out his hand to her as was his custom when she stood near him, but he was afraid that she might not take it.

"Yes, I can promise that," he said. "I'll not offer her any more money. I don't want to see her again, God knows."

It was an easier promise to make than Rose guessed. The old man, under an air of mild concurrence in her demands, experienced a sensation of cynical amusement at the thought that the first move for a reopening of negotiations must come from Berny.

"Oh, yes, I'll promise that," he said amicably. "You needn't be afraid that I'm going to go on offering her a fortune. The thing's been done, the woman's refused it, and there it stands. I've no desire to open it again."

She leaned down to take his hand. He relinquished it to her with an immense lightning of his heart, and peace fell on him as he felt her rub her cheek against his knuckles.

"So you're not mad at the old man, after all?" he said almost shyly.

"No," she murmured, "not at him. I was angry at what he was doing."

It was a subtly feminine way of getting round the delicate points of the situation—that inconsistently feminine way which separates judgment of the individual from judgment of his acts. But it relieved the Bonanza King of the heaviest weight that had lain upon him for many years, and, for once, he gave thanks for the irrationality of women.

"Well, good night, honey," he said, "no matter what crazy notions you've got, you're the old man's girl all right."

She kissed him.

"And you won't forget your promise?" she murmured.

"Of course not," he said stoutly, not sure just what she was alluding to. "Any promise I make to you stands put till the Day of Judgment. Good night."

When she left him, he lit another cigar, sank lower in his chair and stared at the fire.

It was a deadlock. In his helplessness, the enraged helplessness of the man who had ridden triumphantly over all obstacles that fate had set in his path, his prevailing thought was how much he would like to kill Berny. She had done all this. This viper of a woman, the kind to tread on if she raised her head, had baffled and beaten them all. He could not murder her, but he thought with grim lips of how he could crush and grind her down and let her feel how heavy Bill Cannon's hand could be.

STORIES OF CAMP AND WAR

FIGHTING AT FORT STEDMAN

One of First Regiments to Charge Enemy Was 208th Pennsylvania—Stirring Activities.

Your description of the battle of Fort Stedman, March 25, 1865, prompts memory of the stirring activities of the early morning hours of that day. I have a letter from a comrade who stated: "After reading the two last issues of The National Tribune on the Fort Stedman fight one would suppose that our brigade was not in it," etc.

You, of course, could not cover the many interesting details, and for this reason I will make some amplification which will probably interest comrades, writes Miles C. Huyette of Buffalo, N. Y., in the National Tribune.

The 208th Pennsylvania was on the Bermuda Hundred front—under Butler in the Eighteenth Corps—from late in August, 1864, until late in October, when we were relieved by a brigade of colored troops from the Ninth Corps, and we crossed to the south side of the Appomattox river, and formed a part of Hartranft's Division, Ninth

"Form Your Company."

Corps. Our winter quarters were in a depression a little north of the Avery House, division headquarters.

The night of March 24-25 was foggy and damp. The smoke of smoldering campfires hung low; all night long the usual crackle of the muskets of the pickets kept up, punctuated with an occasional "hee-haw" of the army mules. We slept fully clothed. About 4:30 a. m. I was awakened by an occasional cannon shot, more intense crackle of musketry—nearly volley firing—and the rebel yell. I thought best to get ready for trouble, and, without waking my messmates, I took the three canteens and went to a low spot in the swale, where we had a pork barrel sunk in the mud, and filled the canteens with water. When I returned to the hut a mounted officer or orderly (in the darkness I could not determine which) galloped by from division headquarters, and as he passed shouted: "Form your company, and double-quick for Fort Stedman. Don't wait for anybody."

The company (B) was quickly formed, and we started for the fort. To the left rear of Fort Haskell we ran into the rebel skirmishers. We then lay down and began firing. Our line was nearly at right angle to our main line of works and our left about 100 yards to the rear of Fort Haskell. Mortar shells were dropping, by the ton, at an angle from the left, and shrapnel from the same general direction; minie balls and, later, canister, from our own cannon, which had been captured at Fort Stedman and turned on us, from the front.

Fort Haskell was a rim of fire to the north and west. In the darkness we could not determine if or not the foe was in possession of Fort Haskell, and it was difficult to prevent the men from firing in that direction. The other companies of the regiment formed on our right.

As daylight approached a slight air movement made a rift in the pall of smoke over Fort Haskell, and we could see Old Glory waving from its ramparts. It looked good, and, oh how we did cheer! The starry flag never before looked so good.

It is a matter of official record that the 208th Pennsylvania was the first regiment to charge the line of the enemy, and cleared the rebels out of our line from Fort Haskell to Fort Stedman, recapturing Batteries 11 and 12 and capturing 350 prisoners. Scott Eckert (Co. B) was the first man back in Fort Stedman, and he was followed by the right of our regiment.

The order to "charge" reached Lieut. Col. Heintzelman 15 to 20 minutes after we had regained full possession of the works. When the order to charge was given I was on my knees, opening a box of ammunition. Many of the men were out of cartridges and were taking from cartridge boxes of the wounded and dead. Your description of the close and deadly fighting does not paint the word-picture as red as conditions justified. It was the first place I saw footprints of men in puddles of human blood. Blood was on my boots when the fighting ended. It was hell! When we gained full possession of the works firing ceased.

All Sores Are Not Cancerous

While all Old Sores are not cancerous in their nature, every healing ulcer shows a degenerated condition of the blood. Virulent impurities in the circulation produce angry, discharging ulcers, while milder and more inert germs are usually manifested in the form of indolent sores or dry, scabby places. Efforts to heal an old sore with external applications always result in failure because such treatment does not reach the blood, and the ulcer will continue to eat deeper into the surrounding flesh as long as a polluted circulation discharges its impurities into it. S.S.S. heals old sores of every nature by purifying the blood. It goes to the fountain-head of the trouble and drives out the germ-producing poisons and morbid impurities which prevent the place from healing. Then a stream of rich, nourishing blood, which S.S.S. creates, causes a perfect and natural knitting together of all flesh fibres, making a thorough and permanent cure. The sore does not "come back" when S.S.S. has made a cure, because its source has been destroyed. Book on sores and ulcers and medical advice free.

SNYDER REPORTED TO BE RECOVERING

Condition of Young Burglar is Very Encouraging According to Information from Reformatory.

PARENTS PAID HIM A VISIT

Young Man Had Good Record at the Institution—Studied Chemistry While There Before.

Word has been received here from the Indiana Reformatory that Oliver Snyder, the young burglar from Brown county who was taken there for safe keeping, is improving at the hospital of that institution. In attempting to escape from Chief of Police Abell, the man was shot through the right leg so severely that it was necessary to amputate it midway between the knee and the hip.

According to information which has been received here, young Snyder does not seem to show much regret because of his trouble but has often stated that he feels sorry for his father and mother. The parents, Mr. and Mrs. Greenberry Snyder from Beck's Grove, Brown county, visited their son and were visibly affected by his latest role as a professional burglar.

It has not yet been decided just what arrangements will be made regarding his punishment although the matter has been taken up with Governor Marshall. He has informed the local officers that he will give the question his early consideration, and it is probable that Snyder will be pardoned from his first sentence of from ten to twenty years and will then be given a heavy sentence for his crimes here. It is expected that he will be returned here in October when he will be indicted by the grand jury, and as he has already admitted his guilt it is thought that he will plead guilty when arraigned. If this should be the case he will probably be immediately sentenced and returned to the reformatory.

During the three years Snyder was at the reformatory on the former sentence, he took up the study of chemistry and pharmacy and was assistant to the reformatory physician. It is stated by the officials that he made an excellent prisoner and was unusually bright in his studies. He stood an examination, it is said, and was given a license by the State Board of Pharmacy.

He Hadn't the Heart to Do It.

Grouchy Patron—Goodness, man! Why don't you rid this place of flies? There must be a million of them!
Restaurant Proprietor—Sorry, sir, but I can't. Kind of a sentiment, you see. The money that gave me my start here came as a prize in a contest in which I swatted 3,646 more flies than my nearest competitor!—Puck.

Remarkable.

Willis—He is a remarkable man and the best hod carrier in the world.
Gillis—No great glory in that.

Willis—Ah, but he has never written a magazine article on hod carrying, nor delivered a Chautauqua lecture on hod carrying, nor even done a hod carrying act in vaudeville.—Puck.

Offerings to Neptune.

"Ever cross the ocean, Mrs. Leeder?"
"Fourteen times."
"Ever been seasick?"
"Fourteen times."
"Mercy! Why haven't you given up ocean voyages long ago?"
"O, one's position in society requires these—er—sacrifices."

A Necessary Exception.

"Ah, my friend," said the man who was fond of moralizing, "it is true that we can really accomplish nothing until the crooked has been made straight—"

"Of course," interrupted the man in the loud clothes, "you except corkscrews?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

Taking No Foolish Chance.

"No," she said, "I can't be your wife. Why will you not be satisfied to let ours be a case of platonic love?"
"Because I don't believe in getting into trouble if there's a chance to keep out."

His Mistake.

"A scientist said not long ago that music would make a cow give more milk, but it won't work. I bought a phonograph and tried it."
"The scientist did not say a phonograph, he said music."

The Question.

"They say the hobble skirt must go."
"Well, who is going to take the steps to make it go?"

OLD MAID HAD BEEN WAITING.

Ella—They say that all things come to him who waits.
Stella—I wish they would change that "him" to "her."

Questions.

When Adam delved and Eve span,
Who was then the gentleman?
When Eve tolled and Adam sweat,
Who was then the suffragette?

A Pessimist's View.

"We couldn't have a tea boycott today like they had in 1776."
"Oh, some people would go in for it."

"But others wouldn't. And the wise guys would immediately get busy delivering it in unlettered wagons."

Endless Chain.

"Wombat had five daughters. The week after the last one married off the first one got a divorce and came back to him."

"Well, did he start in again?"
"Yes; he's on his third time around now."
